Political correctness puts lives at risk

Once again, London's Notting Hill Carnival descended into an orgy of criminality. Over the two-day event, police arrested over 400 people. Five people were stabbed and eleven police officers were attacked. Calls for the event to be moved to a larger area such as Hyde Park, or to be banned altogether are ignored as organisers claim it is a "community event". So, until our government puts aside political correctness and takes action, lives will continue to be put at risk.

Police v Democracy

The attacks by Luton police on Britain First, a legally registered political party, are frightening. An injunction banning a political party from campaigning in a part of Britain is undemocratic and unacceptable. Arresting activists for wearing a fleece jacket or a woolly hat with the party logo on, and then calling them "political uniform" is petty. Will members of establishment parties be arrested for wearing their party ties or t-shirts? Of course not!

Britain First have become a target because their front line activities has become a nuisance to Luton police and this is their way of trying to frighten them off. In a dangerous precedent, we feel sure that other police forces soon follow suit and other "inconvenient" patriotic parties and groups will become targets for this type of harassment and political repression.

Jayda Fransen is due to appear at Luton Magistrates Court on the 2nd of November at 9am. Whilst Britain First may be banned from demonstrating their support, other nationalist groups and individuals are not banned. If you care about free speech for nationalists, then please try to be there!

When will they ever learn ?

Between them, Germany, Sweden and Denmark have invited over one million migrants to come and settle in Europe. In every one of these countries migrants have abused the hospitality offered by committing acts of criminality, including sexual assaults, child abuse and rape. Now this phenomenon has arrived in Britain. Eighty-seven percent of all migrants to Britain from Syria and Iraq have been given asylum, and David Cameron also invited a further 20,000 Syrians living in safety in Jordan and neighbouring countries to come to Britain. The result? Over 900 Syrian refugees have been arrested in Britain for crimes including theft, rape and child abuse. David Cameron should be made to apologise personally to every single victim of refugee criminality, and the criminals should be deported back to their camps in the Middle-East without delay!

Refugees Bring Crime Wave to Britain

When German Chancellor, Angela Merkel, invited over one million mainly Muslim migrants to Germany, critics tried to warn her of the potential consequences. Merkel ignored the warnings, and within months, refugees had launched a series of sex attacks against women throughout Germany. Young Muslim men, whose culture regarded women as subservient sexually abused German women and girls in swimming pools, parks and massively, at an open air New Year's party in Cologne. The immediate response by the local police to the mass attacks in Cologne was to impose a blanket of silence around the ethnicity of the attackers, a tactic later repeated in Sweden and shamefully in Britain!

Britain had wisely negotiated an "opt-out" prior to the invasion and was not bound by any EU directive to "share-out" numbers of refugees but, totally illogically, and without any consultation to the British public, David Cameron decided to invite 20,000 Syrian refugees to Britain, refugees who were living safely in camps away from the war zone in Jordan.

In addition, Syrian refugees arriving illegally in Britain, smuggled in the backs of lorries, were given priority by the Immigration authorities, and instead of being treated as criminals, over 85% were immediately granted asylum. Up to March 2016, 1,600 Syrians had been resettled in Britain from their safe-haven of Jordan and a further 2,500 had been granted asylum and permission to remain here.

So imagine the government's embarrassment when a Freedom of Information request revealed that almost 900 Syrians have been arrested in the past 12 months for crimes including rape, sex assaults and violence!

The FOI request was sent to all 44 police forces in England and Wales but 5 refused to provide any information. Those that did comply revealed that 238 Syrians had been arrested in London for rape, other sexual offences and making death threats

In Thames Valley 97 were arrested, in the West Midlands 56, in Hertfordshire 55 and in Northumbria 16 arrests had been made.

Four of the arrests in Northumbria, led to accusations of a "Cologne style cover-up" when the police failed to report to the media that all four suspects of sexually assaulting two British schoolgirls were Syrian, and one had only recently been resettled in Britain thanks to the government's new scheme! The alleged attacks took place in Leazes Park, Newcastle.

In Germany, the sexual attacks by migrants have led to a violent response from young Germans. Refugee hostels are burnt and gangs of migrants loitering in the streets are attacked. Running battles between migrants and local youths are becoming so frequent; they no longer lead the news.

In Britain, there has been a reported increase in racial attacks but, somewhat bizarrely, many of the victims have been hard-working White Christians from Poland. But in Sunderland, local youths quickly responded to allegations that a white mother of three children had been drugged and gang raped by six men, all Muslim migrants. The victim claimed she had been taken to a house in Peel Road, Sunderland and beaten and raped. Within hours of the news breaking, a group of local youths attacked the house breaking doors and windows. This has been followed by a series of protest marches with activists from both the Sunderland Defense League and Pegida UK getting involved. One of these demonstrations descended into violent conflict when the demonstrators were attacked by a group of Asian men, who presumably were supporting the rapists!

Without strong immigration and deportation policies and the right to protest without facing immigrant violence and police bias, the future for Britain is not, we fear, a peaceful one.

NEWS AROUND BRITAIN

Violence at Carnival (Again)

The Notting Hill carnival, billed as "Europe's biggest street party" once again exploded into an orgy of violence, drug dealing and street robbery. The two-day event, held in the streets of West London, has a well defined history of criminality including murder, rape and violent attacks on police. This year was no exception!

Carnival: Violence, robberies and sex assaults lurk behind the public view of the Notting Hill carnival

The first day of this celebration of Caribbean culture is called "Children's Day" where children parade in fancy dress, and five men were stabbed, one, a 15 year-old boy, being described as "critical".

Also on "Children's Day", the London Ambulance Service treated 179 people at street treatment centers and 27 people were taken to hospital.

By 10pm police had arrested 105 people for offences ranging from sexual assaults, possession of offensive weapons, drug offences, actual bodily harm and grievous bodily harm. Just another day at the carnival!

Day Two

In the weeks preceding the carnival, police had made over 250 arrests of people suspected of planning crimes at the event. Most of these were then released on police bail, with a bail condition that they kept away from the carnival area.

Despite this, a further 245 people were arrested on the second day of carnival; bringing the total arrested in connection with this "celebration of Caribbean culture" to over 600!

Overworked Para-medics, treated over 400 partygoers at street treatment centers, making a total of over 600 in just two days. Fifty-seven people needed hospital treatment for their injuries, many as a result of violent assaults; bringing a total over the two days to 84.

Although police deliberately ignored cannabis being openly smoked on the streets, they still managed to arrest over 100 people for drug offences, most of these being "with intent to supply". A drug dealer's carnival!

Despite being advertised as a "street party", 60 "revellers" were arrested for being in possession of offensive weapons, mainly knives, bringing the weekend's total to almost 100.

Given this recipe for violence, it came as no surprise that 11 partygoers were arrested for attacks on police officers. So serious was the situation a representative from the Police Federation told news media that his officers hated policing the event and were spat at and treated as "professional punch-bags"!

Ever since it's beginning, the carnival has almost every year featured violence, drugs, street robbery and sex offences. Calls to ban it are ignored by senior police and politicians for fear of upsetting the Black "community". So, seemingly, residents of West London will have to continue to accept this weekend of violent disruption forevermore, in the cause of community relations and political correctness.

Health Tourists Still Robbing Britain

Despite promises by the government to rein in foreigners using the NHS for free, almost 1000 foreign patients had cataract operations in NHS hospitals in just two years. Most then flew home without paying the £2,500 bill.

The biggest offenders were Africans from Zimbabwe and Nigeria. By law, only patients who are "normally resident" in Britain, and have lived here for at least six months are eligible for free treatment, including operations and scans.

In addition, ALL foreigners get free maternity care, access to a GP and free treatment at A&E.

Previous government reports show that 84% of health tourists never pay their bills.

Over 75% of hospital trusts overspent their budgets in 2015, forcing the taxpayer to inject a further £3.8 billion into the NHS budget of £110 billion.

Twenty-Five Percent of EU Doctors Fail NHS English Test

More than a quarter of EU doctors applying to working the UK have failed basic English tests a recent report revealed.

The tests, introduced in 2014 are just based on basic English and do not include medical terms. The General Medical Council (GMC) has revealed that of the 3,700 doctors who applied to work in the UK, over 1000 failed to read and speak basic English.

As the tests have only been running for two years, there are now serious concerns that some doctors who arrived before the introduction of the tests may be in a position to put the lives of patients in danger.

Several EU doctors have been banned or suspended from working in Britain, including a Polish heart surgeon whose English was so bad that colleagues complained he could not understand basic instructions. The surgeon had been working in Britain for 8 years and had been sacked from two hospitals for inadequate language skills. He has so far failed three English tests. In 2008, a German registered doctor working in Britain caused the death of a patient after misunderstanding instructions which resulted in the doctor giving the patient ten times the maximum dose of morphine.

At present the EU forbids the testing of medical staff working in the UK who arrived before 2014, but this may change once Britain leaves the EU.

Concern over NHS Workers Who Can't Speak English

A report commissioned by the British Cabinet Office has revealed that there are at least 5,500 foreign-born workers employed in hospitals, schools local councils and other public sector jobs who are unable to speak the basic English needed to perform their jobs safely.

Under the new 2016 Immigration Act they can be sacked but, the Cabinet Office proposes that millions of pounds of taxpayers money be spent on language courses, and those of fail or refuse the tests be "redeployed" to other jobs where they do not have to deal with the public.

There are concerns how these people got the jobs in the first place, but the seemingly nobody is pursuing this.

Calling The True Israel Peoples

Police Persecute

A British police force appears to be conducting an unprecedented campaign of persecution against a legally registered political party, in a shameful attempt to deter its political activities.

Britain First, one of Britain's most active patriotic parties have conducted several political activities in Luton, Bedfordshire, over the past year or so. Activities have included marches, rallies and leafleting sessions calling for a ban on building mosques, a ban on halal food in schools and the use of Sharia law in the UK.

As Luton has a higher than average proportion of Muslim inhabitants, Britain First activists have often had to face hostile crowds only contained by a heavy police presence.

The police, who are supposed to remain unbiased on such occasions suddenly, and without warning, decided to apply for a High Court Injunction effectively banning the party from political activity in Luton.

It was mid-July when Britain First received notice that Bedfordshire police had applied to the High Court in London for a legal injunction of nine parts which would ban Britain First leader, Paul Golding and deputy, Jayda Fransen from entering various parts of Luton without police permission. This, and other conditions, would prevent the party from any political activity in Luton without police permission. The injunction would last for three years, and carry the power of arrest for any breaches.

Paul Golding and Jayda Fransen: Banned from Luton

With just one month's notice before the case was due to be heard, the party began to raise the estimated £15,000 it would cost to fight their cause. But then they were advised if they failed to win any of the nine conditions on the injunction they could be liable not only for their legal costs, but also the costs of the police, with a total bill estimated to be around £50,000.

Just two days later, Paul Golding was told to report to his local police station in Kent, regarding an incident on a cold January day in Luton, six months previous, where Paul was leafleting, wearing a warm fleece jacket with a Britain First logo on it. On arrival, Paul was met by officers from Luton, who formally charged him for "wearing a uniform for political purpose"! Paul was eventually released on police bail but with the most draconian bail conditions, six in total, including the need to sign on at his local police station EVERY DAY between 12 and 2pm. This farce continued for two weeks until Paul completely outmanoeuvred the police by simply pleading guilty and thus ending the police bail conditions which were preventing any political activity. He was fined £450 for wearing the "political uniform".

Is this a political uniform?

Unfortunately, although the guilty plea released Paul from the draconian bail conditions in return for a small fine, it equally meant that he had agreed that wearing clothing with the logo of a political party could be construed as wearing a political uniform!

Then, just two days later, Jayda Fransen, the deputy-leader of Britain First was charged with the same "political uniform" offence, over her wearing a woolly hat, with the BF logo on the same cold day in January in Luton.

In addition, during the activity in Luton that day, a white, female, Muslim convert verbally attacked Jayda, for being in a "Muslim area". Jayda politely defended her right to speak and go anywhere in Britain. Firmly, but politely. But this has resulted in a second, more serious charge of "Religiously aggravated harassment, alarm and distress".

This offence carries a potential jail sentence!

British Patriots

At this time, although police arrested Jayda, they did not charge her and she was released on police bail. The Crown Prosecution Office, on behalf of Luton police, told Jayda the bail conditions would last until the end of March. In fact, the police later, and unknowingly to Jayda, extended the bail conditions until the 19th of July, and then issued a warrant for her arrest for not surrendering on that date!

Yes, this is happening in Britain, not North Korea!

Will Police now regard this t-shirt as political uniform?

As the police and the CPS are supposed to be politically neutral, we now await the arrest of Labour party activists wearing their "political uniform".

In view of the charges, and particularly the threat of a prison sentence attached, Jayda cannot submit a convenient guilty plea; she must fight for her freedom. Jayda is due to stand trial in Luton on the 2nd and 3rd of November.

A reasonable defence will cost in the region of £5000.

There is an old saying, "its NOT paranoia if they ARE out to get you", and this could certainly apply to Britain First. For, in addition to the legal battles being waged against them, their payment provider decided without prior notice to close down the account used by the party to collect donations, membership fees and other money raising activities! As Britain First had over £7000 in this account the decision to close it was clearly not financial, more a political decision no doubt encouraged by the state! In a further attempt to damage the party, the company announced that funds in the account would be frozen for up to four months. No valid reason has been given.

As we go to press, we believe that following further legal advice and the state sponsored attacks on their finances, Britain First have reviewed their position on the forthcoming High Court battle and are likely to have to concede to the injunction.

This could make things interesting for the electoral commission if a council or parliamentary bye-election was called. As a legally registered political party Britain First would be entitled to stand candidates in Luton, and voters in Luton would have the democratic right to have candidates campaigning for their vote.

Forgotten British Heroes Campaign Lay Wreath in London

For the second year running, the Forgotten British Heroes Campaign laid a wreath at the site of a Zionist bombing in London in 1947. A coalition of British nationalists, including Richard Edmonds, Martin Webster and London Forum founder, Jez Turner called for the arrest of French citizen, Robert Misrahi who allegedly planted a bomb at the Colonial Club, St Martins Place, London in March 1947, and still lives in France. The Degradation of White Youth

Occasionally something slips out in the controlled media that draws attention to some serious dysfunction in society, knowledge of which is generally ignored or deliberately suppressed. So it was when the liberal Independent, in November 2015, reported on research by the prestigious Institute of Fiscal Studies about the intake into British universities. Figures compiled by the Institute show that only 32.6% of White British pupils go on to university after taking their GCSEs. This is the lowest of any ethnic group. For Black Caribbean's, the next lowest, the figure is 37.4%. Other ethnic groups do even better: Mixed Race 39.1%; Pakistani 44.7%; Bangladeshi 48.8%; Black African 56.6%; Indian 67.4%; and Chinese 75.7%.

Differences are 'staggering'

As Dr Claire Crawford, assistant professor of economics at the University of Warwick, one of the authors of the report, said: "The differences in higher education participation between pupils from different ethnic groups are staggering." She added: "We were particularly surprised to find that ethnic minority groups which have relatively lower school attainment are, on average, more likely to continue into higher education than white British pupils."

Not related to achievement

Reports about the difference in educational standards between ethnic groups seem to be very rarely publicised but, for example, according to The Times, in 2000 Ofsted, the educational standards inspectorate, reported that while 44 per cent of White pupils gained five or more A to C grade GCSEs the figure for Black pupils was only 27 per cent and the difference was tending to increase. So the level of achievement at school is clearly not one of the key drivers in determining higher education opportunities.

Explaining it away

What, then, are the causes of these 'staggering' differences? There seems to be some difficulty in explaining it all away. One theory is that ethnic minority parents are more 'aspirational' than White British parents. This is rather insulting; of course, especially in light of the White British record of aspirational achievements in the past, such as the Industrial Revolution and the founding of the greatest empire the world has ever seen. Further, it seems to suggest that, for example, Chinese parents are far more aspirational than Black or Pakistani parents.

Professor Alan Smithers, who is director of the Centre for Employment and Education Research at Buckingham University, is quoted as saying that "Ethnic minorities value education more than white British families do." More stereotyping and insulting language but, no doubt, acceptable to the liberal elite as it is only directed against White people. The good professor, however, did let slip another probable (indeed much more likely) cause.

The real cause?

According to the Independent, he argued that "universities were under pressure from ministers to increase the participation of ethnic minority pupils." This pressure does not seem to be diminishing, even though it must have been clear for some time that White pupils were losing out. Indeed, the Independent mentioned that, just a few days before, the Government had published proposals for an increase in the number of non-White students going into Higher Education of 20 per cent by 2020.

All Whites discriminated against

This latest Government proposal establishes, incidentally, that Poles, Czechs, Scandinavians and other White ethnic minorities are also being discriminated against. (Interestingly, the Independent referred only to an increase in "ethnic minority participation," leaving its readers in ignorance that only non-Whites were being pushed forward).

The needs of white pupils are being ignored

The Degradation of White Youth

Continued

The apparent discrimination against White pupils is certainly not of recent origin. As long ago as 1981 a report by the Government-sponsored Schools Council stated that "Poor white pupils are forgotten and neglected in many schools where they are outnumbered by black children. Many head teachers were "stressing" that the needs of White pupils were being ignored.

Victims of an anti-White agenda?

Hypocrisy exposed

Since the brief report about under-representation of Whites at British universities appeared in the Independent, the subject seems to have been quietly forgotten or swept under the carpet. One can only imagine what the response would have been if the report had shown such a 'staggering' under-representation of Black pupils, regardless of educational attainment. The papers and other media would be full of denunciations day after day; politicians would be trying to outdo each other in their protests against such iniquity; 'celebrities' would be condemning the authorities at every publicity-seeking opportunity. We would not have heard the end of it until universities abandoned all rules and standards on admissions standing in the way of the anti-White agenda.

Effect on key job markets

Unfortunately, this is not something that can just be pushed aside with contempt as politically correct nonsense. The fact is that generally people who go to university do get the edge over others in many key job markets, even if the 'degrees' they come away with are often irrelevant. For these graduates become the managers, executives and opinionformers in every aspect of our national life. It is surely bad for everyone, of course, regardless of ethnic status, if people attain these positions through social engineering rather than merit. Alas, the priorities of the globalists and cultural Marxists have nothing to do with nurturing national interests, let alone fairness.

Obituary

Peter Mullins

1936-2016

It was with great sadness that we learned of the death of Peter Mullins on the 28th of July.

Peter's dedication to nationalism was second to none, working tirelessly and giving his time and money with generosity.

A former member of the RAF, Peter joined the Conservative Party and supported Enoch Powell.

In the late 1990's he moved to Cornwall and became the curator of the Daphne du Maurier and Smugglers museums at the famous "Jamaica Inn" hotel on Bodmin Moor.

At this time he ditched the Conservative party and joined the British National Party. He quickly became the BNP's Western area organiser and stood as a BNP candidate for the local County Council, and several times as a Parliamentary candidate in various places including Enoch Powell's old Midlands constituency. In later years, Peter helped to found the, short-lived, Freedom Party and became its first chairman.

Peter was a committed, honest and true Englishman, who will be sadly missed by both those who knew him and the entire patriotic nationalist movement. Britain is a poorer place without him.

Merkel Shocked Over State Election Result

Following German Chancellor, Angela Merkel, admitted she was "shocked and disappointed" at her Christian Democratic Party finishing in third place in the state election in Mecklenburg-Vorpommern, behind the patriotic, Alternative for Germany (AfD) party.

Immigration, not the economy, was the main focus of debate throughout the election with Merkel's CDU finding it difficult to defend its leader's decision to invite over one million migrants to come and live in Germany.

The AfD party, which was founded in 2013, warned the German electorate that German culture, religious beliefs and its very identity were under threat from the mass migration encouraged by Chancellor Merkel and the CDU party.

AfD won 21% of the vote, giving it 18 seats in the 71-seat state parliament. It now has seats in 9 of the 16 state parliaments across Germany. The ultra-nationalists of the National Democratic Party (NPD) lost their representation in the state parliament after polling just 3.2%, down from the 5% threshold required to get seats.

AfD also won 14% of the vote in the Berlin State elections, winning 25 seats in the state parliament for the first time. AfD now has seats in 10 of the 16 state parliaments.

Hungary Challenges EU Migrant Allocation

The EU decision to allocate numbers of migrants to individual member states has been challenged by the Hungarian government who are to hold a referendum on the issue later this year. In much of Europe the people are against migration but Brussels does not want to hear the voice of the people."

Dutch politician, Geert Wilders, leader of the patriotic Freedom Party, has published the party's manifesto for the March 2017 election campaign. Hitler's Birthplace Seized by Austrian Government

The Austrian government have imposed a "compulsory purchase order" on the house in Braunau am Inn, where Adolf Hitler was born in 1889.

The house, owned by Ms Gerlinde Pommer, has remained empty since it was last used as a post office some years ago. Ms Pommer has refused to allow the property to be rebuilt, sold, or rented for commercial purposes, and has received a payment from the government of almost £4000 a month to leave the house empty.

Now the government have compulsorily purchased the property, claiming they feared it would be eventually bought by National Socialist sympathisers. It is believed that the building will now be turned into a museum, featuring a Holocaust memorial.

Migration Crisis

Economic Migrants CAN'T Be Deported

Europe is facing another migration crisis as third-world countries refuse to take back economic migrants that have been served with deportation orders, thus making a mockery of Germany's Chancellor Merkel's promises that the EU would only accept genuine refugees from the Syrian conflict.

Following the "Open door" invitation to Syrian refugees by the German Chancellor, migrants, who were arriving on the shores of Italy and Greece at the rate of 2000 a day, made their way through the Balkans to Germany and Sweden. Between January 2015 and March 2016 United Nations observers estimated over one-million people used this route. No attempts were made on route to weed out economic migrants from the genuine refugees; many European states just waved the migrants through to Germany.

Initially, many Germans welcomed the migrants, but as numbers arriving started to climb to 800,000, the public mood began to change. Chancellor Merkel assured the German people that economic refugees, including tens of thousands from Africa and the Indian-sub continent would be swiftly deported.

Germany welcomes migrants

In addition, Mrs Merkel planned to absorb the vast numbers still pouring into Europe, by persuading the EU to "share" the refugees amongst the other EU members by imposing a number of migrants on each individual member country.

Hungary has objected to this diktat, and will hold a national referendum on the issue. Hungary has already denied asylum to over 90% of the applicants' on the grounds that they are "economic" migrants. But deporting them could prove difficult.

Sweden, with its liberal approach to migration, also became a prime destination for refugees and asylum seekers, but following an epidemic of sexual assaults committed by migrants, and the discovery that almost 80% of refugees were bogus, Sweden has promised to deport them but, it is finding it easier said, than done.

The main problem is countries such as Pakistan, Tunisia, Morocco and Algeria have refused to take back their citizens deported from the EU. In Germany, over 5000 have been served with deportation orders, but to date only 53 have successfully been deported. Frightened that the remainder will go "undercover" the German authorities no longer distribute the bogus refugees throughout Germany, but instead hold them in detention camps until the situation improves.

Britain had already opted out of taking in an allocation of migrants, and instead volunteered to resettle 20,000 Syrian refugees direct from camps in the Middle-East. The cost to British taxpayers has been estimated at £1.7 billion! In addition, in a two year period, Britain granted asylum to 32,000 refugees, while deportations of bogus asylum seekers fell to just 520.

Unless the situation changes, the future for Europe looks dire. A new migrant route, from Libya into Italy has been established, with almost 4000 mainly African migrants arriving in just one weekend. Observers estimate there are 800,000 more prospective migrants in Libya waiting their turn to invade Europe.

Economic migrants: Here to stay?

Germany tightens sexual- assault laws and promises to deport migrant rapists

Following a massive upsurge in sexual assaults committed by asylum-seekers and migrants, the German parliament has voted to introduce legislation that will clarify what is sexual-assault and rape, and legislation that will see migrants and asylum-seekers convicted of sexual crimes deported even if the Courts give them a suspended sentence.

The new legislation is aimed at closing legal loopholes which have allowed dozens of sex offenders avoid prosecution and for the first time, treats serious sexual assault as rape.

Following the mass sexual assaults committed in Cologne on New Year's Eve, only two men, both recent migrants, have been convicted. One, an Algerian national, and the other, an asylum seeker from Iraq, were given one year suspended prison sentences. They walked free from court.

All through the summer, in parks and swimming pools there has been a virtual epidemic of sexual assaults. In Düsseldorf, a secret police report, leaked to the press, described an "enormous increase" in sexual assaults committed by migrants.

More sexual assaults

News is just emerging that a number of women attending the "Original City Party" in Essen recently were subjected to numerous sexual assaults by men described as "migrants of North African origin".

Police said the Essen victims were attacked by men of North African appearance operating in groups of four and six who "drove their victims into corners and then groped them all over". Police have made several arrests.

Immigration policy "a disaster"

With German's elections due to be held next year, Chancellor Merkel's support is slipping, and for the first time her approval rating has dipped below 50%.

A recent poll revealed that over one third of all Germans thought her "open door" policy of inviting refugees to Germany was "a disaster".

Following the invitation by Mrs Merkel for refugees to come to Germany over 1 million arrived in just a few months. Now, the German Interior minister, Thomas de Maziere has warned there are over 500 Islamic militants in the country posing as asylum seekers, who have the capability of forming terrorist cells, or acting as "lone wolves" to commit atrocities. A further 360 potential accomplices have been identified by the Security Services.

No ban on Burka

Despite there being a growing public perception that Muslim migrants refused to integrate themselves into German society, instead, preferring to isolate themselves within their own culture and community, the German authorities refused to join their neighbours in France and Belgium in banning the Islamic Burka headdress from being worn in public.
